IVY TECH COMMUNITY COLLEGE: A LIFELINE TO THE MIDDLE CLASS

Having recently served as Indiana's 50th Lieutenant Governor and now in her role as president of Ivy Tech, the nation's largest singly accredited statewide community college system serving over 170,000 students per year, Dr. Sue Ellspermann has more than 30 years of experience in higher education, economic and workforce development, and public service.

In "Ivy Tech Community College: A Lifeline to the Middle Class," Dr. Ellspermann will focus on the role Ivy Tech plays to provide both short-term credentials and degrees which allow the rise out of poverty and into robust career opportunities for the 66 per cent of Ivy Tech students who are Pell-eligible (low income).

"Stability, education and opportunity are the pathways to upward mobility," says Dr. Ellspermann. "The important work done by housing organizations like Habitat for Humanity – in partnership with communities of faith – provides stability to families who struggle. Ivy Tech provides education. Both provide opportunity."
